The 'Three Pillars of Transforming Care' distils the core propositions of trauma theory into a clear, concise and accessible framework for those providing care, mentoring and education for young people. It does not primarily target therapists or clinicians but residential workers, foster carers, kinship carers, teachers, and youth justice workers as well as those that support, train and mentor them.

The 'Three Pillars' provides a summary of recent research and clinical wisdom along with a review of the common developmental outcomes. It then explores the three core trauma-related needs of those who have been exposed early and sustained adversity such as physical, sexual and emotional abuse, neglect and exposure to family and community violence. Dr Bath has delivered a training program based on the Three Pillars Framework across Australia, Canada, the USA and northern Europe.

Dr Bath has had a long career working with children and young people in the child welfare and youth justice systems. He has been a youth worker, house parent, program manager and agency director. Trained as a clinical psychologist, Dr Bath has also provided direct services for young people and their families as well as training and program support for agencies.

From 2008 to 2015 Dr Bath was the inaugural Children's Commissioner in the NT with a mission to promote the wellbeing of vulnerable children. He currently provides a range of consultancy and training services across Australia and internationally, focusing on the impacts of severe adversity and the promotion of healing and growth.
